The importance of honey adulteration detection has recently increased owing to the limited production levels in recent years and the relative high price of honey; therefore, this illegal practice has become more and more attractive to producers.2D NMR also furnished acceptable results (cross-validation correct classification 90.5%), although the 1H NMR sequence is preferable because it is the simplest and fastest NMR technique.Hence, the need has arisen for more effective analytical methods aiming at detecting honey adulteration.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com