In distributed computing, tasks or workloads are distributed across multiple computer systems, often on a network, so that each system works on a different part of the tasks or data.This allows remote devices to exchange data easily and efficiently, contributing to load distribution across multiple devices and linking them effectively.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com