

as a means of strengthening strategic planning efforts. Assessing employee attitudes resulted in the initiation of an organizational renewal effort that was strongly linked to the long range planning process. Findings suggest that balance between professional and personal life, a clear vision of the future, attention to training and development, and employee involvement are sources of opportunity to increase employee satisfaction and success in strategic planning and implementation.