

In a hematology lab, Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) is essential to protect lab personnel from exposure to potentially infectious or hazardous materials. Lab coats prevent contamination of clothing, gloves provide a barrier for the hands, eye protection shields from splashes, and masks or respirators protect against inhaling infectious particles.