

Desalination technology, renewable energy (especially solar), water-saving technology, greenhouse systems, and alternative feed businesses have all made it possible to grow food even in the most barren soil and under the most extreme conditions.