

Caitlin Clark loses again as Indiana Fever fans single out WNBA star for blame. Caitlin Clark is only four games into her WNBA career but already the women's basketball star is being burdened by the weight of expectation on his shoulders. In her latest game for her new team, the Indiana Fever, Clark suffered her fourth consecutive defeat to leave the WNBA outfit 0–4 for the campaign and she is still searching for her first victory. Against the Connecticut Sun, the Fever lost out narrowly with a 88–84 defeat at Gainbridge Fieldhouse and Clark's performance was one of the big talking points. Clark, who recorded 17 points, three rebounds, and five assists, was blamed for her part in the defeat after being penalised for her first technical foul since playing in the WNBA. Aliyah Boston – the No. 1 pick in the WNBA 2023 Draft – came close to tying the game with six seconds left but missed an open layup. The game went down to the wire, but the Fever couldn't pull it off.
