

is reading the electrical activity of the heart by means of electrodes stick to the skin and recorded by a device external to the body