

Microflora present in soil (especially, in rhizosphere) proved their potential in the control of soil-borne diseases by the process of biocontrol and microbes employed in this technique are referred as bioagents (Cook et al., 1978) or biocontrol agents.