

Without antibiotics some old, established diseases that don't hit our current top worst ten will start return as silent assassins. Even removing a burst appendix would be a dangerous operation once again, as all operations become life threatening if septicaemia takes its toll unimpeded.