

The UK and Libyan education systems differ significantly. In the UK, education is compulsory until age 18, offering flexibility in subject choices and focusing on critical thinking. In Libya, education is compulsory until age 15, with a more centralized curriculum focused on core subjects like Arabic and Islamic studies. UK schools emphasize interactive learning, while Libyan schools rely more on memorization. The primary teaching language is English in the UK and Arabic in Libya.