

Has it happened to you or someone you know? I placed my card in the machine, keyed in my password and to my great delight; there was the money in my account. I searched my small bag and my pockets to no avail. I then checked my account to only get a confirmation that the amount I had requested had in fact been withdrawn. Fortunately, the machine had a security feature which pulled back cash that was not collected within fifteen or twenty seconds! So I pressed withdrawal, took my card out of the machine, as I was supposed to, and happily walked away... Would you believe it?