

The time rate of change in an object's temperature is proportional to the difference between the temperature of the object and the temperature of the surroundings