

The graduate should deliver high-quality, secure, and patient-centered care, leveraging their combined knowledge, clinical skills, and adherence to professional values. They should gather and interpret information, make clinical judgments, and execute diagnostic and therapeutic interventions, recognizing the boundaries of their expertise. This should be done while considering the patient's situation, preferences, and the accessibility of resources.