

Data models define how real-world spatial features are represented in a GIS. Geo-spatial data are typically represented by two main data models (also called data structures): vector and raster.