

impetigo is a common condition, very infectious and frequently occurs as the result of secondary infection of any skin trauma. It quickly develops into vesicles or pustules that rapidly spread to places such as the hands, neck, and extremities. Prevention and early treatment of this disorder is the importance of decreasing recurrence of the disorder. They also should understand the importance of using separate towels, linens, and dishes for the infected individual and washed separately in hot water.