oit is the ethics related to the users of technology, which govern their actions and behaviors towards it, and includes a set of rules and laws that individuals adhere to, and upon which their decisions and actions are based when using this technology.o Respect others, respect their ideas, do not ridicule them, and avoid offending them when communicating with them via various information technology means.o Avoid publishing any content that puts people's security, health, or safety at risk, or any content that is inappropriate, immoral, or offensive to people with physical or mental disabilities Ethics of interaction between the user and the technology itself (the device): o Avoid using a communications method that is not licensed locally to capture the network, such as direct capture from satellites or others.oAvoid entering suspicious, harmful websites, and stick to websites that are appropriate for the age group and meet goals and needs The ethics of using technology between a person and others o Technology users should identify themselves clearly and frankly, as concealing their identity or impersonating others is unethical.o Avoid destroying, changing, or erasing any data or information unlawfully or using it illegally o Avoid collecting any materials or information that affect public morals and ethics or conflict with society's doctrine and values.o Avoid criticizing the teachings of all religions, and avoid insulting religious symbols, bodies, or peoples.o Deal honestly with electronic documents that arrive by mistake via e-mail, return them immediately to their sender, and not exploit them in a bad way.oEthics between the individual using the technology and himself, oEthics between the users each others oEthics between the user and the physical components of the technology.o Accuracy and brevity when presenting ideas and communicating with others.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com