

This article discusses the effectiveness of employing digital media in acquiring classical Arabic – the role of kindergartens– as a model, by linking technological aspects with educational and linguistic aspects. We conducted a field study in two kindergartens, where this descriptive and analytical study was implemented within the framework of contemporary digital education that included children and educators.