

Family history has long been known to be a risk factor for breast cancer. BRCA1 and BRCA2 are abnormal genes that, when inherited, markedly increase the risk of breast cancer to a lifetime risk estimated between 40 and 85%. Both maternal and paternal relatives are important. First-degree relatives, (mother, sister, daughter) are most important in estimating risk.<sup>4</sup>