

A number of factors influence students' attitudes to foreign language learning. Some are related to the teacher, while others are associated with the school and curriculum (Bartram, 2010). The more the EFL teacher approaches his / her students, the more they like the language and the teacher as well, and if the opposite takes place, then the results may turn counter-productive. Students' attitudes towards learning are closely tied to the type of relationship teachers have with them.