

Mean, median, and mode are all ways to describe the "central tendency" of a set of data. They each provide a different perspective on what might be considered the typical or average value in a dataset.