

Difference between an instrumental good and an intrinsic good Among all the things in the world that are valued, we can distinguish things that are valued because they lead to something else from the things that are valued for their own sake. They have qualities or characteristics that are valuable in themselves. The else is the intrinsic. The something that leads is the instrumental good. Money is an example of something that is instrumentally good. Intrinsic is the final goal...