

A program may create a class and hide from its clients the implementation of that class (information hiding) and a client of a class need not know how a class is implemented in order to use its functionality.