

The bacterial genome consists of a single , circular chromosome that carries all of the essential genes and also the non – essential genes , and one or more varieties of small DNA circles called plasmid that generally carries non – essential gene (Fig.I) .Many plasmids contain mobile DNA elements or sequences called as transposons (jumping genes) .Plasmids replicate independently of the chromosome , and can exist in the cell as one copy or as many copies .