

A natural disaster is defined as a natural phenomenon with dramatic and severe technical consequences (object victims, material victims...), accompanied by climate changes. I live in the United Arab Emirates, and here some natural disasters include sandstorms, flash floods and occasional earthquakes. The rain caused some streets and cars to flood, and some houses were completely submerged, but the rescue teams began working immediately and there were no human casualties. These events are relatively rare. At the time of the natural disaster, I stayed at home and studied remotely until the disaster ended. Recently, heavy rain fell on the UAE, and no one expected it to fall. However.