Endometrial cancer is typically endometrioid adenocarcinoma.While endometrial adenocarcinoma is a very common gynecologic malignancy in the U.S., it has a promising prognosis since most women present with symptoms at an early stage; 4% of cancer deaths in women result from endometrial adenocarcinomaThe ACS estimates that in 2017, 61,380 new cases of endometrial cancer will be diagnosed and 10,920 women will die from the disease.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com