

Angel Reese can't stop making WNBA history and fortifies Rookie of the Year status. Angel Reese isn't just playing basketball; she's redefining it. The Chicago Sky's star rookie is tearing through the WNBA record books with a force reminiscent of a young Candace Parker. By the final buzzer, Reese had racked up 17 points and 14 rebounds, cementing her place in WNBA history. Drafted seventh overall in 2024, Reese has been nothing short of spectacular for the Sky. Her scoring prowess isn't far behind, with an average of 13.9 points per game, second only to fellow rookie sensation Caitlin Clark. In the Sky's recent 84–71 loss to the Seattle Storm, Reese clinched her 13th consecutive double–double, surpassing Parker's record that spanned the 2009 and 2010 seasons. Angel Reese's relentless commitment to team success But here's the kicker: Reese isn't even focused on the stats. After dropping a career–high 27 points and snagging 10 rebounds in the Sky's 88–84 victory over the Storm on Friday, she downplayed her achievement. I just go out there and do my job. She's not just consistent; she's relentlessly dominant. In 14 of her first 20 games, she has posted double–doubles, leading the league in rebounds with an impressive 11.7 boards per game. And let's be clear, she's just getting started. The third quarter saw Reese pull off a put–back layup, putting her at 11 points and 11 rebounds for the game. She didn't stop there, though. My job is to rebound, so I'm going to go out there and do my job and rebound.