

Augmented Reality (AR) glasses have the potential to revolutionize the way we interact with food, providing valuable information about its content, harmful components, and nutritional value. Additionally, AR glasses could help consumers make more informed decisions about their diet and nutrition by providing detailed information about the calorie count, macronutrient breakdown, vitamins, and minerals in their food.