

Teacher: Works within a structured, formal educational system (like a school or university) and follows a set, comprehensive curriculum. They typically require formal pedagogical training and state-issued licenses. Instructor: Generally teaches specific, practical skills or a trade rather than broad academic knowledge. Examples include a driving instructor or a computer programming instructor. Their goal is the student's general academic and often personal development within a classroom of many students.