

Multitasking refers to the ability to perform multiple tasks simultaneously. Therefore, while multitasking may not always yield optimal results for everyone due to limitations of human cognition capacity; some individuals might still excel at handling multiple tasks concurrently through practice or natural aptitude. Research suggests that humans have limited cognitive resources, and when we try to divide our attention between multiple tasks, each task receives less focus and efficiency decreases.