

Bacterial cells and structures that are too thin to be seen under the light microscope, are thickened by impregnation of silver on the surface to make them visible e.g. demonstration of bacterial flagella and spirochaetes.