

This study has tackled forced execution and its mechanisms in electronic sales contracts upon the breach of one of the contracting parties of its obligations. Thus, this urges us to advocate for amendments of statute provisions in way that is steered with the technological evolution of forming a contract, identifying all that relates to electronic contracts in order askew away from the contractor or researcher's dependence on the general rules. The binding force of the contract differs depending on the used electronic method for contract formation.