

An economy's productivity rises as the number of educated workers increases since skilled workers can perform tasks more efficiently.