

analyzes the obstacles and prospects for women in AI, highlighting gender equity and inclusivity. Moreover, clear hiring methods and organized training programs are essential for skill enhancement and career advancement. It employs a qualitative examination of literature and case studies within technology companies to assess elements such as organizational prejudice, educational opportunities, and representation in leadership. Findings indicate that women encounter systemic obstacles like algorithmic bias, restricted educational resources, and insufficient representation in leadership positions.