

The size and shape of an object, not just its mass, affect whether it floats or sinks. A kick causes an object to move, friction slows it down, and braking applies a force to stop it. Changing the shape of an object, like squeezing a sponge, alters its form. Forces also affect motion.