

Economic recession in Europe led to cuts in infection prevention and control programs, hindering disease prevention and control, while increased community infections strain hospital services, requiring education, cost analysis, and evaluation to mitigate negative effects.