

Case-control studies are observational studies of people with the disease (or other outcome variable of interest) and a suitable control group of people without the disease. These studies are retrospective, taking a known outcome status (e.g., disease status) and looking at the exposure status.