

Olthof et al. found in a group of men, aged 50–71 years, with elevated homocysteine levels, that a high daily dose of choline (2.6 g), supplemented as phosphatidylcholine, lowered fasting as well as plasma homocysteine concentrations after a methionine-loading test.