

SoundCloud updated its Privacy Policy to offer more details on its product features, data practices, and data sharing. Key changes include expanded information on collected personal data, its usage, and sharing on the platform and with third parties. Updates address specific U.S. state disclosures. The policy now clarifies that listening, liking, or following actions may result in data sharing (including historical data) with other users as a reward system, with an opt-out option provided. Users are encouraged to review the updated policy to understand their rights and choices; no immediate action is necessary.
