In conclusion, living in a large city can negatively affect mental health as result of social isolation, increased levels of stress and insufficient exposure to nature.