

A classification of people according to their relative authority and rank is called a hierarchy. Hierarchy is affected by: horizontal differentiation centralization versus decentralization differentiation versus integration standardization versus mutual adjustment the influence of the informal organization The shape of the hierarchy, plus the balance between centralization and decentralization, establish the extent of vertical differentiation.