The CRT and pRNFL thickness were higher in the Down syndrome group than the control group as determined by means of the measurements in the SD–OCT images, The authors suggested that this condition might be associated with macular developmental disorders in patients with Down syndrome