

Chemical digestion uses enzymes to break down food into smaller molecules that the body can absorb. These enzymes catalyze specific chemical reactions that break down complex nutrients such as carbohydrates, proteins and fats into simpler forms.