

Momentum is conserved: In all cases, the ratio of final to initial momentum is close to 1, indicating that linear momentum is conserved during the collisions. This means that there is minimal energy loss during the collisions, and the objects rebound with minimal deformation. Elastic Collision Conditions: Momentum is conserved: The ratio of final to initial momentum is very close to 1, indicating that linear momentum is conserved during the collisions.