

As measures to combat the threat of coronavirus become drastic including suspension of schools for a month, school and class teachers had to think out of the box to ensure the educational growth of the students. The virtual classroom is being studied left and right and it might just be the way to go. For the method to work, however, there should be a clear-cut communication between the teachers, parents and the students. The online option, for several of the educators, seemed to be one of the most logical choices with many schools not only in Oman opting for this method.
