

In conventional development, wells cannot be drilled until the platform has been constructed and installed. This can mean a delay of several years before production begins.