

When the steering wheel (helm) is turned, electrical power will travel to one of the solenoids and pull the valve ports into line sending hydraulic pressure down the system to a steering ram.