

Caitlin Clark fans rib Diana Taurasi for going scoreless in Team USA win over Belgium. Many WNBA fans on social media remain angry about the exclusions of Caitlin Clark and Arike Ogunbowale from the Team USA Olympic roster. "Arike and Caitlin Clark should be on this team. Diana Taurasi shouldn't be on this team," one fan wrote on X, formerly Twitter. Ogunbowale also caused much chatter regarding how she was snubbed from the Team USA roster following her 34-point Phoenix All-Star Game MVP performance on July 20, her second straight year winning the award. Diana Taurasi was scoreless in Team USA's win against Belgium in the Paris Olympics on Thursday, which added some fuel to the fire for said fans of Clark and the Dallas Wings' top scorer Ogunbowale. Taurasi had the most futile performance in her illustrious Olympic history. The Phoenix Mercury's 20-year legend is now in her sixth Olympics and going for the same amount of gold medals, but that doesn't matter to the naysayers who questioned her role on this iteration of Team USA. She went scoreless on 0-for-3 shooting, committed one turnover, and two fouls in 14 minutes as a starter in the Americans' Group C victory that clinched a quarterfinal berth. "As a committee member, you're charged with putting together the best team of players, the best talent," Staley said.
