

Racha proposes a London trip, highlighting its historical landmarks (Big Ben, Buckingham Palace), cultural attractions (museums, theaters), and vibrant atmosphere. Sony counters with Tunisia, emphasizing its warm beaches, Sahara Desert adventures, ancient ruins (Carthage), and delicious Mediterranean cuisine. Racha argues for London's unique blend of old and new, diverse culture, and free museum access, while Sony points to Tunisia's relaxing atmosphere, unique experiences like camel riding, and budget-friendliness. Racha suggests London first, with Tunisia later, but Sony proposes the reverse due to proximity and cost-effectiveness. They ultimately decide to settle the debate with a coin toss.
