Fairness does not mean everyone gets the same.The lack of safety and support in some medical settings causes undue stress for transgender people seeking healthcare, as shown by the report's results: Transgender people who said their providers displayed visible discomfort due to their actual or perceived gender identity: 32% Transgender people who had to teach their provider about transgender healthcare to receive proper treatment: 33% Transgender people who experienced insurers denying them coverage for gender-affirming care: 50% Equality could go a long way toward making healthcare safer for transgender people.By treating cisgender and transgender people equally, medical professionals can drastically reduce transgender discrimination in healthcare settings.