

Talking on the phone and sending text messages are two common means of communication, each with its own advantages and disadvantages. Text messages are useful in situations that require quick and concise communication, or when it is difficult to talk on the phone. Talking on the phone provides immediate and personal communication, where you can hear the tone of voice and interact more humanly. This type of communication is useful in situations that require detailed explanations or when there is a need for quick interaction.